

Alain Locke Expresses Opinion in Magazine

"It is obvious, in spite of the great necessity for practical and economic contributions in the future on the part of the Negro, that the main line of Negro development must necessarily be artistic, cultural, moral and spiritual. Because of the complementary character of such contributions in contrast with the predominantly practical, economic and scientific trend of the nation, the part which the Negro will play is all the more desirable and promising," writes Alain Locke, philosopher of Howard university, in the June issue of The World Tomorrow magazine.
