The Islam Series

GENERAL EDITOR

The Rev. Canon Sill, D.D., M.A.A.S.

BAHÁ'ISM

'ABBAS EFENDI
BAHÁ'ISM

BY

THE REV. CANON SELL, D.D., M.R.A.S.

FELLOW OF THE UNIVERSITY OF MADRAS

AUTHOR OF 'THE FAITH OF ISLAM,' 'THE RELIGIOUS ORDERS OF ISLAM,' 'ESSAYS ON ISLAM,' 'ISLAM: ITS RISE AND PROGRESS,' 'THE HISTORICAL DEVELOPMENT OF THE QUR'AN'; AND 'THE RECENSIONS OF THE QUR'AN'

THE CHRISTIAN LITERATURE SOCIETY FOR INDIA

FOR INDIA

LONDON, MADRAS AND COLOMBO

1912
PREFACE

The recent visit of ‘Abbás Efendí, son of the late Bahá'u'lláh, and now leader of the Bahá’í community, to London and Paris has drawn public attention to the religious system known as Bahá'ism.

It is hoped that this historical account of the rise of the sect may be of some use in counteracting the extraordinary claims now made for Bahá'u'lláh and his teaching and the assumption that ‘Abbás Efendí is the prophet of a new era.

For typographical reasons the dots and dashes used in the transliteration of certain Arabic and Persian letters are omitted in the notes.

MADRAS, October 1, 1912

EDWARD SELL
This book may be obtained at any of the following addresses:

C.L.S., Post Box 3, Madras;
46 Dharamtala Street, Calcutta;
18 Clive Road, Allahabad;
Dam Street, Colombo;
35 John Street, Bedford Row, London, W.C.

BAHÁISM

The Musalmáns of Persia belong to the Shi‘ah sect which, itself formed by a revolt from orthodox Islám, has been, more than any other section of the Muḥam-madan people, subject to divisions. This is partly due to the character of the Persians, and partly to a somewhat freer spirit, which, as compared with the Sunnís, the Shi‘áhs cultivate. Outwardly, it is true, there is not much difference, and the freedom is only a relative one; but, under the garb of faultless profession, the Shi‘áhs have always held many esoteric doctrines and have secretly taught them. The Súfís, or Mystics, are the best example of this tendency.

The Persians are not naturally a narrow-minded people. In the past, they have shown considerable freedom of thought. It is true that the first great revolt against orthodox Islám was largely influenced by political motives, but it was not altogether free from doctrinal reasons. This revolt led to the formation of the Shi‘áh sect to which the Persians belong. The Persians no longer lead in literature and philosophy, but some of the old traditions remain, and they are open to varying impulses and modes of thought, of which the most remarkable instance in recent years is the rise of Bahá’ísm, a development of the earlier system of Bábísm.

The origin of Bahá’ísm is to be found far back in the Shi‘ah doctrine of the Imámát. The tragic end of ‘Ali the fourth Khalifa, and his two sons, Hasan and Husain, called forth a deep affection for their memory. They were looked upon as the true and rightful Imáms, the only legitimate successors of Muhammad, the great Arabian Prophet. According to the Ismá‘ílfans, one of the two main subdivisions of the Shi‘ah sect, there were twelve Imáms, the last of whom, Abú‘l-Qásim, who succeeded his father in A. H. 260, is supposed to be still alive, though he is now quite concealed from human eyes. After duly performing the funeral ceremonies for his father, he secluded himself entirely. He is called al-Mahdi, the guided one, who is, therefore, able to be a guide to others. The Imáms are believed to be immaculate and infallible. Their authority is the authority of God, their work the work of God. As mediums between God and man they hold a far higher position than the prophets. It is further an article of belief that the earth is never without a living Imam, though according to the Shi‘ahs, he is now concealed. Al-Mahdí is said to have disappeared in the year A. H. 329 = A. D. 940, and to be now living in one of the mysterious cities—Jábulka and Jábulsa. In due time he is to reappear, his advent being heralded by Jesus Christ. Then injustice and misery are to be banished, the true (Shi‘ah) faith will prevail and a millenium of happiness will be ushered in. Meanwhile he is invisible and inaccessible to the great mass of his followers. For a time, however, he seems in some mysterious way to have held intercourse with a select few, who became the channels of communication between himself and the large body of believers. These intermediaries were called Abwáb or gates. These men were four in number, and for sixty-nine years they were, one after another, the gates through which the concealed Imam made known his will. This period (A. H. 260 to 329) is called the ghaibat-i-sughra, or the lesser seclusion. When Abú‘l-Hasan, the last Báb (gate), came to the end of his life, the people begged him to appoint a successor, so that they might still learn the Imam’s will and so be able to obey his commands. He, for some reason or other, absolutely refused to do this, alleging as his reason that ‘God hath a purpose which He will accomplish.’ Now the faithful were sad, for all intercourse with the concealed Imam was at an end. This period is known as the ghaibat-i-kubra, or the greater seclusion. We have in this curious belief the origin of Bábism, of which Bahá’ísm is a later development. The importance which the Bábís attached to these gates is seen

---

2 The Imáms were descended from al-Husain who is said to have married a captive lady, the daughter of Yezdigird III, the last Sassanian king. They were thus descendants of the royal house of Persia, which may account for the fact that the Persians became and remain Shi‘ahs. It also explains in part their intense devotion to the Imáms.
from the following statement about them made many centuries after they had passed away: 'For God has associated refuge in Himself with refuge in His Apostle (Muḥammad) and refuge in His Apostle with refuge in his executors (the Imāms), and refuge in his executors with refuge in the Abwāb (gates) of his executors ... for refuge in the Apostle is the same as refuge with God, and refuge in the Imāms is the same as refuge in the Apostle, and refuge in the Abwāb is identical with refuge in the Imāms.'

We must now pass over many centuries until we come to the time of Shaikh Ahmad (A. D. 1733 to 1826) the founder of the Shaikhi sect. He was a devout ascetic and a man of independent thought. He had a profound belief in ‘Alī. The memory of the Imāms was dear to him. He looked upon them as creative forces, arguing from the text, 'God the best of Creators', that, if He is the best, He cannot be the only one. One of the earliest writers on the Bābi movement, Mīrzā Kāzim Beg, in the Journal Asiatique describes him as a celebrated teacher, who by his virtues, austerity and erudition attracted a large body of disciples. The special point of his teaching is thus described: 'God is immanent in the universe, which proceeds from Him. All the elect of God and all the Imāms are personifications of the divine attributes.'

Thus, the twelve Imāms from ‘Alī downwards to al-Mahdī were personifications of the attributes of God. ‘Alī is the chief of these and holds higher rank than Muḥammad.

The successor of Shaikh Ahmad was Ḥājī Sayyid Kāzim, a young man so mysterious in his actions that many of the worldly-minded Persians looked upon him as foolish, but his followers called him ‘the Enlightened’. Through his ministrations the Shaikhi doctrines spread rapidly, and it is said that there were soon a hundred thousand disciples in ‘Irāq. This does not appear to have called forth any opposition from the Mulla, or the political chiefs, for among the admirers of the Shaikh were a number of State officials and of the clergy; all proud of his name and enthusiastic about his philosophy. The Ḥājī died in the year A.D. 1843 and left no successor. Apparently he and his predecessor looked upon themselves, at least so the Bābi writers say, as forerunners of one who would shortly appear, and whom they called the ‘Promised Proof’ the ‘Master of the dispensation’ and by other such like terms. To Mullā Husain, one of his followers, he is reported to have said: 'From whatever quarter the “Sun of Truth” shall arise, it will irradiate all horizons and render the mirrors of the hearts of the believers capable of receiving the effulgence of the lights of wisdom.'

The Shaikhis, being now left without a leader, and bearing in mind the expressions used by those who had been their late leaders, began to look about for a spiritual director. Mullā Husain proceeded to Shīrāz and there met with a young man, named Mīrzā ‘Alī Muḥammad, an ardent enthusiast who claimed to have received a call to a divine mission. Mullá Husain thought him too young for such leadership. Then one day Mírzá ‘Alí said: ‘By what signs canst thou recognize the Master?’ Mullá Husain replied: ‘By the possession of the “Point of Knowledge”, which is the source and centre of all the wisdom of past and future prophets and saints.’ Mírzá ‘Alí then proceeded to give a marvellous exposition of many abstruse questions as proof that he possessed the ‘Point of Knowledge’. Mullá Husain pondered over this extraordinary occurrence for several days, and at last became convinced that in the young man before him he had found the ‘Sun of Truth’, the ‘True One’, to whose advent Hájí Sayyid Kázim had looked forward. He had no longer any doubt and wrote to his friends at Kerbela that he had found at last a man worthy to be their Murshid. This readiness to espouse the cause of the new leader and to recognize in him the Báb or gate, brought great honour to Mullá Husain who received the titles of Babu’l-Báb—‘Gate of the gate’; the Harf-i-Awwal—the ‘First Letter’; the Awwal man ámana—the ‘First to believe’. Then arose a great dispute. Many of the Shaikhís refused to receive the Báb,¹ as we shall now call Mírzá ‘Alí Muhammad, and became his bitter enemies, but in time the great majority accepted him, and he became the real founder of the Bábí sect.

---

1 Episode of the Bāb, p. 233. 2 Sūratu’l-Mu’minūn (xxiii) 14. 3 Journal Asiatique, Sixième Série, tome viii, p. 458. 4 According to Mīrzā Kāzim Beg, the doctrine of the Shaikhī school was that the attributes of God proceed from the Supreme Existence, and by His own will become personified in blending with the human soul and spirit which also emanate from God.

The Shaikhís rejected two of the five articles of the Shi’ah creed—‘adl, or justice of God, and ma’ád or the resurrection. They said that there was no sufficient reason why justice alone of all the attributes of God should be selected as an article of belief, and that His wisdom, power, or any other attribute had just as good a claim to be inserted in the creed. They objected to the resurrection being made a special article on the ground that its acceptance is implied in the belief in prophetship, for to believe in a prophet means to accept his teaching about the resurrection. Having thus depleted the creed, it was necessary to add something to it. They invented a new article of faith, which they called the Rukn-i-Rábi’, or the Fourth Support or Pillar. This is interpreted to mean that there must always be amongst the believers a perfect man—Shí’ah-í-kámil—who can be the channel of grace—wásíta-i-faíd—between the absent Imám and his people. The term is thus primarily applied to the dogma that the absent Imám, now somewhere concealed, must always have some one on earth who possesses his entire confidence, to whom he imparts special spiritual instruction, and who is thus qualified to impart to the whole company of believers the wishes and wisdom of their invisible head. Thus the name ‘Fourth Support’ came to be applied to the person who fulfils this office. The Báb at first claimed this position, and thus to occupy the place held by the gates, or intermediaries, between the absent Imám and his followers. Thus Bábísm is connected with the central dogma of the Shi’ahs, the belief in the Imámát; still it has so far departed from accepted Muslim ideas in other matters as to form a new sect altogether.

¹ They followed Hájí Muhammad Karím Khán, a member of the royal family. The Shaikhís, such as there are, still accept his descendants as their leaders.
The Báb was born in Shíráz on October 9, 1820. At an early age he lost his father, and then under the charge of an uncle engaged in mercantile pursuits, but for these his habit of religious meditation and his love of speculative thought unfitted him. He gave them up and proceeded to Kerbela where his zeal for learning and his austere life soon brought him into notice. His earliest written work was a commentary on the twelfth chapter of the Qur'an known as the Súratu Yúsuf. This was followed by commentaries on other Súras and also by an edition of some prayers. These he called asbáṭ-i-ilhámíyáh, or inspired pages; kalám-i-fítra, or word of conscience, but he made no claim to the highest form of inspiration (wahí), which Muslims hold to be that of the Qur'á'n. Count Gobineau says: 'In the first of these books, he was pious and a mystic: in the second polemic and dialectic occupy a large space, and his hearers noticed with astonishment that he unfolded new meanings which no one had hitherto thought of in the chapter of the Book of God which he had chosen, and that he deduced from it, above all, doctrines and teachings absolutely unexpected.'

Whilst some persons were displeased with him, many were attracted to him, but, as his views became more generally known, he became bolder in the assertion of his claims. On May 22, 1844, when about twenty-four years of age, he openly declared himself to be an authorized teacher of divine truth and assumed the name of the Báb, and said: 'Whosoever wishes to approach the Lord his God and to know the true way that leads to Him must do it through me.' This was a bold challenge to the Muslim Mullás, but, according to Ká'im Beg, his followers increased day by day. Many were dreamers and mystics, of whom there has always been a number in Persia, who thought the teaching accorded with their own pantheistic views; there were others who, dissatisfied with the condition of life in Persia, thought that his system might lead to reforms, and some were drawn to him by his attractive personality. In any case, success began and soon after Mullá Húsain cast in his lot with the Báb.

There is some difference of opinion as to the reason which led him to adopt the title of Báb. The most accurate account seems to be: 'He (Mírzá 'Alí Muḥammad) now gave out that, as 'Alí had been the gate by which men entered the city of the Prophet's knowledge, even so he was the gate through which man might attain to the knowledge of the twelfth Ímám (al-Mahdí). Later on he discarded the name of Báb, and called himself the Qâ'im, or the expected Ímám. His followers gave him the titles of Hazrat, or Holiness; Hazrat-i-nuqṭá-i-bayán, or His Holiness the Point of Revelation; Ḥazrat-i-Rabbiyú'l-Á'lá, or His Holiness the Lord Most High; Ḥazrat-i-nuqṭá-i-úlá, or His Holiness the First Point. Gobineau says: 'Mírzá 'Alí Muḥammad said he was not the Báb in the sense in which they (his followers) had believed, and as he himself had

\[^{1}\textit{Les religions et les philosophies dans L'Asie Centrale, p. 147 (I shall refer in future to this work under the name of its author, Gobineau).}\]

\[^{1}\textit{Watson, History of Persia, p. 348.}\]
It will be seen that he now claimed to be more than a medium of information, and assumed to himself the position of one who could lay down as exact truth what his followers should believe. Having thus put forth his claim to be a recognized leader with divine authority, he proceeded to make the pilgrimage to Mecca in the year 1844. He duly performed all the ceremonies of the Hajj, but it does not appear to have brought him back to orthodox Islam, nor did it postpone the opposition of the Mullás, who now became alarmed at the growing veneration in which many people held him. A little later on he was brought as a prisoner to Shiráz, though liberty of speech and action was given to him. He avoided attacks on the dogmas of Islam, but severely rebuked the Mullás. His general topic was the sad and distressed state of men generally. Obscure allusions in his speeches awakened an interest amongst the curious, and delighted those who had been initiated into his teaching. He taught openly and had frequent discussions with the Mullás; but according to Kágím Beg, one ended disastrously. The Ulamá assembled. The governor, Husain Khán, who had assumed the character and position of a learner, humbly suggested that the Báb should demonstrate that his doctrines were superior to those of Muhammad. The Báb answered boldly: 'Take my Qur'án, compare it with that of your

1 Notes of this discussion will be found in The Episode of the Báb, pp. 266-7.

2 Ibid., pp. 264-5.
intercourse with his friends. His new place of imprisonment was the citadel of Chihriq. He was then taken to Tabriz to undergo his first examination. The Muhammadan version of it is that the Báb showed himself foolish and ignorant. The Bábí account is that he advanced in a successful manner his claim of Mahdī-hood, which caused a tumult. Up to the present time he seems to have been treated by men in authority with kindness and consideration; but now he was beaten and sent back to confinement in Chihriq. The reason for this probably was the new attitude taken by the Mulas, who, in addition to the charge of religious error, maintained that the Báb and his followers were a danger to the State. The King, Muḥammad Sháh, however,

1 Many curious expedients were resorted to for the purpose of conveying letters to the Báb (cf. The Episode of the Báb, p. 276). The confinement at Mákú lasted six months and at Chihriq two and a half years.

2 The whole examination was naturally unfavourable to the Báb (cf. The Episode of the Báb, pp. 279-89). His claim to be at Mahdí is shown in the following:

Báb.—'I am that person for whose appearance you have waited a thousand years.'

Hájí Mullá Mahmúd.—'That is to say you are the Mahdí, the Lord of Religion.'

Báb.—'Yes.'

Hájí Mullá Mahmúd.—'The same in person or generically.'

Báb.—'In person.'

This marks a distinct advance, for he was no longer merely the gate of entrance to the concealed Imam, the medium of intercourse between that revered person and the faithful, but the twelfth Imam, al-Mahdí, come back to live amongst men and to claim the allegiance of all good Shi‘áhs.

On the following day the Báb and one of his youthful

1 Many curious expedients were resorted to for the purpose of conveying letters to the Báb (cf. The Episode of the Báb, p. 276). The confinement at Mákú lasted six months and at Chihriq two and a half years.

2 The whole examination was naturally unfavourable to the Báb (cf. The Episode of the Báb, pp. 279-89). His claim to be at Mahdí is shown in the following:

Báb.—'I am that person for whose appearance you have waited a thousand years.'

Hájí Mullá Mahmúd.—'That is to say you are the Mahdí, the Lord of Religion.'

Báb.—'Yes.'

Hájí Mullá Mahmúd.—'The same in person or generically.'

Báb.—'In person.'

This marks a distinct advance, for he was no longer merely the gate of entrance to the concealed Imam, the medium of intercourse between that revered person and the faithful, but the twelfth Imam, al-Mahdí, come back to live amongst men and to claim the allegiance of all good Shi‘áhs.
disciples, Aqá Muḥammad 'Ali, were condemned by the Mullás and then (July 9, 1850), handed over to the Colonel of the regiment appointed to carry out the sentence of death. Mirzá Káẓim Beg gives the following account of what took place. 'The roads which led to the court of the barracks were crowded with people. At a military execution in Persia, the condemned are tied together with their backs towards the firing party. Aqá Muḥammad 'Ali begged to be allowed to turn his face towards the people, and then in a loud but calm voice, he began to say some prayers which had been composed by his master. The Báb kept perfectly silent. His solemn demeanour and attitude aroused the sympathy and compassion of the spectators. The governor and the Mullás tried to allay this by preaching loudly against the Bábí doctrines, and setting forth in an exaggerated form the evils of the system. They succeeded with difficulty in checking the pity of the spectators. Then, after two volleys had been fired, the deed was done and the Báb and his young disciple met their fate.' There were no political grounds for this execution of the Báb, for though, driven to it by persecutions, the Bábís had been in revolt, there is no evidence to show that the Báb, then a prisoner, had any part in it or even encouraged it. This is the opinion of Count Gobineau, a great authority on Bábísm.

The corpses were cast out of the city near the moat to be devoured by dogs and jackals, but after a little time were conveyed away by the Bábís, who, by bribes or the influence of powerful friends, obtained possession of them. 'They were wrapped in silk, placed in one coffin and sent to Tihrán where, by the order of Mirzá Yaḥyá (Ṣubḥ-ı-:Ezé) who, though but twenty years old, had been chosen to succeed the Báb, they were deposited in a little shrine called Imám-záda-i-Ma'şúm. Here they remained for seventeen or eighteen years, till the schism originated by Bahá'u'lláh deprived his half-brother Şubḥ-ı-Ezé of the supremacy in the Bábí sect which he had hitherto enjoyed. Then they were removed by the Bahá'ís to a shrine at 'Akká (St. Jean d'Aere).'

The Prime Minister fondly hoped that all trouble was at an end now that the Báb was no more, and that peace and quietness would ensue; but he entirely miscalculated the strength of the movement and the devoted ardour of the Bábís. So far from the loss of their leader putting a stop to the growth of the sect, it only increased its numbers.¹

The Báb does not appear to have been a political agitator, and politics had nothing to do with the inception of the movement. His desire was to introduce religious reform, but he did not see that in a land where Church and State were so closely connected this must eventually ¹ Aqá Muhammad 'Ali was urged by his brother to give up the Báb and so to save his life. His reply shows the remarkable power the Báb had over his followers and how devoted they were to him and his cause. He met his death with complete resignation. The letter he wrote to his brother is an exceedingly touching one. See JRAS, October 1889, p. 992.

² Journal Asiatique, Sixième Série, tome vii, p. 377.
The most active measures were now taken against the Bábís, a number of persons, probably fifty, were arrested, of whom about twenty-eight were condemned to death. The sentence was carried out in September 15, 1852. The authorities were alarmed and determined to make a terrible example. The prisoners, says Mírzá Kázím Beg, "were tortured in the most odious manner, with an unheard of refinement of cruelty." An English traveller says: "Tow steeped in oil was inserted between their fingers and behind their shoulder blades, leaving portions hanging down which were lighted, and in this condition the unhappy wretches were led, as long as they could walk, through the principal streets of the capital. No time was lost between apprehension and execution, death was the only punishment known. The headless bodies lay in the streets for days, the terrified relatives fearing to give them burial, and the dogs fought and growled over the corpses in the deserted thoroughfares." Count Gobineau says: "children and women with lighted candles stuck into their wounds were driven along by whips, and as they went they sang, "we came from God, to Him we return," when the children expired, the executioners threw the corpses beneath the feet of their fathers."

Some of these persons, such as Qurratu’l-'Ayn, and 'Aqa Seyyid Husain of Yezd were in strict confinement at the time of the attempt in the Sháh’s life and, therefore, could not possibly have had anything to do with it. Their execution was due to their religious opinions and in order to strike terror into the hearts of the Bábís.

1 Ussher, Diary of a journey from London to Persopolis, p. 628.
2 Gobineau, p. 302.
3 Suleyman Khan's
execution is thus described: 'At first four knife wounds were made in his breast, into which lighted candles were placed. Red hot horseshoes were fastened to his feet, and he was then led round the streets of the bazaar. His teeth were then torn out of his mouth and arranged as a crescent on his head. He then died.' This man bore his tortures with great heroism, and sang verses showing happy he was to give his life for his faith.

In order to avert from the Shah and his ministers any special hatred of the Bábís, and to minimize the possibility of retaliation, the prisoners were divided amongst different classes of persons, who were responsible for the execution of the victims allotted to them. Thus the 'Ulamá representing the clergy; the princes, the nobility; military officers; professors and merchants—all had to take their part in the executions.

The punishment was for a political offence, though dislike of a sectarian movement may have had its share in the action of the government. The Bábís, however, looked upon it as a religious persecution and so far from suppressing the movement it led to a large increase in the number of the secret followers of the Báb. Persecution had failed hitherto also for it is said that, 'in a very few years (1847 to 1852), this religion spread throughout Persia, and counted innumerable devotees. It was not an ignorant population that was stirred up, but leading members of the clergy, persons of good education, women belonging to important families, philosophers and Sáfís. Even Jews were affected.'

Persecution continued to fail for later on Lord Curzon considered them to number nearly one million, drawn from men in every walk of life.

One of the most noted persons put to death in 1852 was Qurratu‘l-‘Ayn, a learned lady of great intelligence and strong personality, who had embraced with heartfelt devotion the teaching of the Báb. At Kerbelá she gave a public address to the Shaikhís, but the governor made her go away. She went to Baghdad but was again made to move on. So she wandered from place to place, everywhere preaching and making converts. Some of the Bábís were not well pleased that a woman should do this; but the Báb supported her and gave her the title of Janáb-i-Ṭábira, or Her Excellency the Pure. After the insurrection at Mázandarán she was taken prisoner and sent to Tihrán. The Shah having seen her said he liked her looks and that she should be left quiet. Her imprisonment was not, therefore, rigorous, and she was allowed to have occasional intercourse with her Bábí friends. Her marvellous beauty, enthusiasm and eloquence won for her the regard of her custodian Mahmüd Khan, who did all that his duty allowed him to soften the rigour of her captivity. Her life was in no danger, until the attempt to assassinate the Shah was made. Even then she was offered her freedom if she would deny that she was a Bábí, live quietly and cease to teach. She refused life on such terms. She had no connexion whatever with the attempt on the life of the Sháh, and so her execution which now took place was a crime and a political blunder. She was the most remarkable of all the followers of the Báb. Highly educated from an oriental point of view, eloquent, fearless, she had marvellous power over an audience. She threw her whole soul into the cause she advocated and inspired with perfect confidence all whom she influenced. She was a mystic, for her poems have the Súfí element in them, yet she was a practical woman who saw much in the social and political life around her which needed reform, and she was not afraid to let her views be known. The manner of her death cast a halo of glory round her short and active career.

---

1 Vámbiry, Wanderungen und Erlebnisse in Persien, p. 299.
2 Gobineau, p. 308.

The teaching of the Báb is contained in his book called Bayán, composed in 1848, a name sometimes applied to his collective writings, sometimes to a particular book. A good deal of the Báb’s teaching is very mystical and fanciful, but the following is a summary of the more important dogmas: God is eternal and unapproachable. All things come from Him and exist by Him. Man cannot approach Him except through some appointed medium. So, distinct from God there 1There is an evident connexion between this dogma of the Bábís and the Súfí system, in which the ‘First Intelligence’, or ‘Primal Element’ is represented as a manifestation of God. To the Súfí, as to the Bábí, God is ‘sterile in His inaccessible height.’ Men can never be more than slaves, nearness to Him is impossible. But men longed for communion with some one or something above them. They felt the need of some intermediary and found it in a revival of the old Gnostic notions of the Eons, forms of manifestation of the Ineffable and Incomprehensible. Neander thus describes the Gnostic view: ‘Self-limitation is the first beginning of a communication of life from God, the first passing of the hidden Deity into manifestation, and from this proceeds all further self-developing manifestation of the divine essence. Now, from this primal link in the chain of life there are evolved, in the first place, the manifold powers or attributes inherent in the divine essence, which, until that first self-comprehension, were all hidden in this abyss of His essence.’ This intermediary is the Primal Will of the Bábí and the Primal Element of the Súfí, who also calls it by the names of the Pen, the first principle, the spirit of Muhammad, Universal Reason, or ‘Aql-i-Kull. God’s voice is heard through it, by it material strings were brought into existence. It works in prophets and saints. The Imam is closely connected with it. I am not able to find out whether the Báb taught that the Primal Will was created or not. In Súfí theology it certainly is, for in the Akhlaq-i-Jaláí it is written: ‘It is admitted, equally by the masters of perception and conception, that the First Principle which, at the mandate, “Be and it is”, issued by the ineffable power and will, from the chaotic ocean of inexistence, was a simple and luminous essence which, in the language of philosophy, is termed the Primary Intelligence, and the great fathers of mysticism and investigation call it the Muhammadan Spirit.’ It is to this and not to the inaccessible and incomprehensible God that the Imam seeks to return. When his work in life is done, then ‘his end is joined to his beginning—Ba āgház gírdad báz anjáám.’ It is a curious phase of human thought which 1The country of ‘I’ and ‘We’ forsake; thy home in annihilation make,

Since fearing not this step to take, thou shalt gain the highest felicity.
This is pure Súfism.
incarnate in the prophets. This Primal Will which spoke in all the prophets of the past, spoke also in the Báb who is the Nuqta-i-Bayán, or the 'Point of Revelation' and will speak in 'Him whom God shall manifest'. This is apparent from the following texts of the Bayán: 'The whole Bayán revolves round the saying of "Him whom God shall manifest". 'A thousand perusals of the Bayán are not equal to the perusal of one verse of what shall be revealed by "Him whom God shall manifest". 'The Bayán is to-day in the stage of seed, but in the day of "Him whom God shall manifest", it will arrive at the degree of fruition.' It must be remembered that Bábá'u'lláh afterwards claimed, and is allowed by his followers, this exalted position. The following are some of the expressions used of Bábá'u'lláh by his followers. 'Bábá'u'lláh has come for the perfecting of the law of Christ, and his injunctions are in all respects similar.

For instance, we are commanded that we should prefer that we should be killed rather than that we should kill. It is the same throughout, and indeed could not be otherwise, for Bábá'u'lláh is Christ returned again, even as He promised, to perfect that which He had begun. Christ returns to you as Bábá'u'lláh, with angels, with clouds, with the sound of the Súfís evidently borrowed from the Gnostics, and the Bábís from the Súfís. This earnest longing for communion with a manifestation of God we can sympathise with, and only regret that in their ignorance or repudiation of the Christian doctrine of the incarnation, both Súfí and Bábí have so sadly missed the mark.

1 Browne, A Year among the Persians, pp. 308-9.
he had special communication with them and was, in fact, the Báb.

At this stage, the usual Muḥammadan customs were not set aside. The month of Ramadán was observed as a fast; but the 'Ulamá were bitterly reproached for opposing this new revelation. Thus the Báb says: 'O people of the earth, give thanks to God, for verily we have delivered you from the doctors of doubt.'

For a more complete exposition of the Bábí dogmas, Professor Browne, to whose valuable researches we are chiefly indebted for the best information on the subject, refers to the Persian Bayán, from which quotations have already been made. This work brings out more fully the theory of a Primal Will and declares that, 'That which spoke in Adam, Noah, Moses, David, Jesus and Muhammad was the one and the same Primal Will. In each manifestation news has been given of the following one. Thus the Jews were told to expect a Messiah, but they rejected him; the Christians to expect Muhammad but, as a rule, they did not accept him; so the Muhammadans are taught to look out for Imám Mahdí. Yet now he has come (i.e. in the Báb) they persecute him.'

The chapters of the Bayán are arranged in groups of nineteen, a number which has a peculiar significance with the Bábís. Each letter of the Arabic alphabet has a numerical value, and so dates can be given by words or sentences. Alif, the first letter, stands for God, and the word for one is wáḥid. The numerical value of the letters in this word is nineteen. God is absolute Being, or wujúd, the value of the letters of which also comes to nineteen.¹ The names of one of the attributes of God is Ḥayy, or the living one. The sum of the letters of Ḥayy is eighteen, to which, if we add the letter Alif, the One which pervades all, the sacred number nineteen again comes out. Nineteen, then, represents the manifestation of the unknowable essence, and $19 \times 19 = 361$ represents the manifested universe, or all things, expressed by the term 'Kulu Shey'. The numerical value of 'Kulu Shey' is 360, to which Alif, the One pervading all, is added, and we again get 361, or $19 \times 19$.

In this world, God is represented by Mírzá 'Alí Muhammad, the Báb who is called the Nuqta, or Point,³ ¹This is in accord with the second canon of the Cabballistic system of Biblical interpretation in the thirteenth century, which is called Chematria, or 'the use of the numerical value of the letters of a word for purposes of comparison with other words which yield the same or similar combination of numbers' (Dr. Briggs in Biblical Study, p. 307). I am not prepared to say that there is any connexion between the Cabballists and the Persian mystics.

³There is a connexion between the Bábí use of the term Point and the sacred number nineteen. According to a Shi'ah Tradition, 'Alí said that the whole Qur'án was implicitly contained in the Súratu'l-Fatiha (i) and that this again was contained in the Bismilláh at the head of it. This in turn was contained in the initial letter b (ب) and this in turn in the dot or point under the b. To this 'Alí added the words: 'I am the point (nuqta) under the b.' There are nineteen letters in the Arabic formula. In the name of God, the merciful, the forgiving. These nineteen letters then are the manifestation of the point under the b or ب.

BAHÁ’ISM

and his eighteen disciples. ‘These eighteen are called the hurúfát-i-ḥayy, or letters of the living, because by them the Báb bestowed life upon the world.’ These again with their leader form the number nineteen, and thus constitute a wáhid, or complete unity, and, as each disciple was to have nineteen under him, we again arrive at 361, which represent the numerical value of the letters in ‘Kulu Shey’ or the number of all things. On this same ground the Bayán has nineteen parts, and each part has nineteen chapters. The Bábí year has nineteen months of nineteen days; each day has nineteen hours and each hour nineteen minutes. The same principle was adopted to regulate measures of distance and of weight; law and commerce were to come under its influence. ‘Organize,’ said the Báb all things under the number of the unity, that is to say, by a division into nineteen parts.1

Another point on which the Bayán lays much stress is that no revelation is final. This is entirely opposed to the ordinary Muḥammadan view, which is that as Muḥammad was the Khatamul-Anbiyá’, or ‘the Seal of the Prophets,’ his revelation closed the series. The Báb taught that, as the human race progresses, the Primal Will, the teacher of men, speaks in each new revelation more fully and more clearly.2 All these successive and progressive revelations and dispensations were not for the purpose of abrogating-preceding essential laws, but to complete them and especially to prepare the world for the fuller teaching of ‘Him whom God shall manifest’.

The Báb taught that men who looked upon revelation as final had gone astray. The Jews looked forward to the advent of the Messiah, yet when he came they rejected him. The Christians were told that the Paraclete would come, yet, when Muḥammad, the promised comforter, arrived, they would not accept him. The Shi’ahs pray for the coming of al-Mahdí, but when he appeared as the Báb they put him to death. So the Báb insisted on the fact that he was not the last manifestation, and referred to ‘Him whom God shall manifest’. Baha’u’lláh claimed to be that person. Assuming that his claim is valid, which the Ezélí deny, still according to Bábí teaching he will not be the last, and some other claimant may arise to supersede him. No doubt, the Báb expected that long ages would intervene, and the condition of the world would change before the appearance of a new manifestation. By his action Baha’u’lláh has taught that only a few years are required and has thus prepared the way for constant change, when some one strong enough to make his way shall appear. He thus set a precedent for his son, ‘Abbás Efendí, to follow. As against this theory the Báb’s position is clear. ‘A new religion is not sent to be more complete than Muḥammad, who himself was more complete than J-e-sus, as Jesus in turn was more complete than his predecessors,’ Gobineau, p. 317.

1 Gobineau, p. 322.
2 He said that he (the Báb) came only for the further development of the knowledge of the divine nature; that all the prophets in succession had said more about this than their predecessors were called upon to do, and that it was simply as a consequence of this regular progress that to him had been assigned the task to until the development of the human race renders this necessary. A revelation is not abrogated till it is no longer sufficient for the needs of mankind. There is no disagreement between the prophets: all teach the same truth, but in such measure as men can receive it. As mankind advance and progress they need further instruction. The instruction given by Abraham was suitable and sufficient for the people of his day, but not for those to whom Moses was sent, whilst this in turn had ceased to meet the needs of those to whom Christ was sent. Yet we must not say that their religions were opposed to one another, but rather that each manifestation is more complete and more perfect than the last.\(^1\)

The great point in the Bābī theology is that the teacher is one and the same, though he manifests himself according to the capacity and needs of those to whom he is sent. The outward form changes but the Universal Spirit remains. It then follows that 'since this Universal Spirit is absolute good, we must believe that it always has a manifestation in the world... hence during the long intervals which separate one prophetic dispensation from the next, there must be in the world silent manifestations of the spirit, intrinsically not less perfect than the speaking manifestations whom we call prophets.'\(^2\) Such persons would seem to be those who in Ṣūfī phraseology had annihilated self, escaped the delusions of plurality and realized the unity of True Being. They differ in degree but not in kind from the prophets.

The Bāb was a prisoner when he showed such interest in preparing the mind of his followers for this 'Coming One'. The Bayān is full of it. It is laid down that in every assembly of believers a vacant place must be left for him. When his name is mentioned all must rise up. In any case, the ground was all prepared for Bahā'u'llāh when he made his claim.

The Bayān speaks with confidence of the success of Bābīsm. The future Bābī community is to form a perfect Utopia and its governments are to be tolerant. The kindly nature of the Bāb is seen in the fancy sketches he draws of the future. At the day of judgement, 'He whom God shall manifest' will preside. All the good people will be praised for their works, their piety, their obedience. Evil men will be annihilated. Thus the good will return to God and dwell in Him; the bad will pass away and be no more.

The Muḥammadan doctrines of the examination of the dead in the graves, the resurrection, širāt, heaven, hell, are all treated allegorically. The first is really a summons to the people to believe in the next manifestation of the Primal Will, the resurrection is the appearance of this manifestation. Širāt, or the bridge, is the belief in the prophet of the age, a matter difficult to the self-willed, but easy to the seeker after God. Hell is ignorance and denial of the last manifestation of God, through the Primal Will incarnated in the prophet, whilst heaven is joy in it. The views of the Bāb on a future life are not very clear. Speaking of barzakh\(^1\) he says, 'What is intended by barzakh is merely the interval between two manifestations, and not that which is commonly known amongst men, for none knoweth what shall be decreed unto them after death except God.' The hope of a future reward was not placed before his followers as an inducement to accept him, and this is in direct contrast to the conduct and teaching of Muḥammad. In the Bayán the Báb wrote the following striking words: 'So worship God that, if the recompense of thy worship of Him were to be the fire, no alteration in thy worship of Him would be produced. If you worship from fear, that is unworthy of the threshold of the holiness of God, nor will you be accounted a believer; so also, if your gaze is on Paradise, and if you worship in hope of that, for then you have made God's creation a partner with Him.'\(^9\)

\(^1\) Browne, A Year among the Persians, p. 303.
\(^2\) Ibid., p. 327.

The great festival is that of the Persian Naurúz or New Year's day. Instead of the Muḥammadan fast of Rāmādān of thirty days, a month of nineteen days, the last month of the Bábí year, is appointed. Images and pictures are not allowed in places of worship; but music and singing are lawful in such buildings for purposes of devotion. A belief in the efficacy of talismans and charms is encouraged.\(^3\) Each man constantly carries on his person a charm in the shape of a star, the rays of which are formed of lines containing the name of God; the women carry one made in the form of a circle. No encouragement is given to mendicants.

It is said: 'The most hateful of mankind before God is he who sits and begs; take hold of the rope of means, relying on God, the Causer of Causes.' The traffic in slaves is forbidden, and there are laws about great criminal offences, and civil matters, such as inheritance, endowments and so on. Shaving the head is not allowed, but the beard may be cut off. Legal impurity is abolished and intercourse with persons of all religions is enjoined. Music is permitted, wine and opium are prohibited. The furniture of houses should be renewed every nineteen years. It is recommended that chairs should be used. No one must carry arms except in times of tumult or war. Circumcision is treated as a matter of indifference. The Báb allowed a second wife to be taken, but prohibited concubinage.

All are to read the sacred books regularly, to be kind and courteous in their conduct, to give alms, to approve for others what they would like themselves, and to forgive their enemies. Instead of the Muḥammadan salutation, 'As-salama 'alaikum and alaikumu's-salam' or 'peace be upon you' and 'upon you be peace,' the Bábís amongst themselves say, on meeting one another, Alláhu abhá—'God is most bright,' to which the response is the same.

After the death of the Báb, the chief interest in the movement circles round Mírzá Ya'qúb and his elder half-brother Mírzá Ḥusayn 'Alí, known as Bahá'u'lláh, who became the respective leaders of the two sects, into which the Bábís soon became divided, the Ezelis and the Bahá'ís. There seems no doubt that the Báb in the year 1849 nominated the former, whom he named

---

\(^9\)JRAS October, 1889, p. 931.
\(^3\)Gobineau, p. 336.
Subhí-Ezel (Morning of eternity), as his successor, and who for a short time really held an undisputed position as the spiritual head of the Bábí community. His claim to this office is based on the document, of which Professor Browne gives the following translation:—

This is a letter from 'Alí before Nabil, the remembrance of God unto the worlds, Unto him whose name is equivalent to the name of One, the remembrance of God unto the worlds.

Say, 'Verily all originate from the Point of revelation' (nuqṭa-i-Bayán).

O name of the One, keep what hath been revealed in the Bayán, And what hath been commanded, 'Verily thou art a mighty way of truth.'

Professor Browne says: 'In my opinion it is proved beyond all doubt that the Bab, ere his death chose him as his successor.'

In 1852, when the attempt on the life of the Sháh was made, the Bábís were bitterly persecuted, and Subhí-Ezel escaped to Baghdad, which then became the headquarters of the sect. Bahá'u'lláh, who had been imprisoned in Tihrán for four months, joined him some years after.

1 The New History of the Bab, p. 426.
2 A name of the Bab.
3 Wahid, one. The numerical value of the letters in Wahid is 18, which is also the value of the letters in the word Yahya, one of the names of Subhí-Ezel. It is thus clear that the Bab meant Subhí-Ezel and not Bahá'u'lláh to succeed him.
4 The Episode of the Bab, p. 350.

They remained quietly at Baghdad for eleven or twelve years, directing a cautious and steady propaganda. In the early part of this period Bahá'u'lláh retired for two years into Turkish Kurdistan, which the Babís say was a period of purification and preparation for his great office; but the Ezelís say that he went away, because he was annoyed at the opposition he met with.¹

The Persian government, stirred up by the orthodox Mullás, at length objected to the residence of the Babís in Baghdad, and prevailed on the Turkish authorities in 1864 to deport them to Constantinople, from whence a few months later on they were sent to Adrianople.

Subhí-Ezel led a very secluded life in Baghdad, and the correspondence was carried on and other matters attended to by Bahá'u'lláh, a man of resolute will and ambitious character. At first he acted in the name of Subhí-Ezel, and professed to do all he did under his instructions; but in time the idea gradually formed itself in his mind that he should become actually, indeed he was already virtually, the head and leader of the Bábís. Thus the influence of Bahá'u'lláh grew, and at last in 1866-7 he began to advance claims which afterwards culminated in the assertion that he was the person to whom the Bab referred in the expression, 'He whom God shall manifest.'² It required great firmness of purpose to withstand such a claim made by such a man, and 'such firmness Subhí-Ezel, a peace-loving, contemplative, gentle soul, wholly devoted to the memory of his beloved master, caring little for authority, and incapable of self-assertion, seems to have altogether lacked.\(^1\)

² سُنْنُ تُقُريبَةٌ ﴿الله﴾

The Ezelis did not admit the claim made by Bahá'u'lláh and maintained that before the person of whose advent the Báb had spoken could come, Bábísm must obtain general currency, and the laws laid down by the Báb in his books must be accepted by most of the nations of the world.\(^2\) They further added to their reply that it was not to be supposed that two manifestations, that of the Báb, and that of 'Him whom God shall manifest' could take place with so short an interval between them. The Bahá'ís, who admitted that Șubh-i-Ezel was the first vice-regent of the Báb, to all the objections alleged against Bahá'u'lláh replied that Șubh-i-Ezel's rule was only to last until the manifestation of the new leader, who was to come suddenly, and the time of whose advent was known only to God; that the Báb had stated that the new prophet come suddenly, and that it could not happen that any one should falsely claim the honour of being the new manifestation. They also used an argument well known amongst Múhammadans, an argument based on the literary style of the books given by means of a divinely-appointed messenger. They asserted that the Lauh-i-Násir, the book in which Bahá'u'lláh announced his mission, fulfilled this condition of a divine revelation by its eloquence of diction and the wonderful knowledge, unacquired by study, displayed by its author. Anyhow the conflicting claims to the leadership led to quarrels, blows and loss of life. A number of Ezelis, probably about twenty-five in number, were assassinated by the followers of Bahá'u'lláh, though there is not sufficient evidence to show that they acted under his orders. He was, however, charged with an attempt to poison Șubh-i-Ezel. The Bahá'ís rebut this charge by saying that it was Șubh-i-Ezel who put the poison in the food Bahá'u'lláh was expected to eat. Mr. Phelps ('Abbás Efendí, pp. 42-3) holds the latter view and animadverts severely on Professor Browne's suggestion that assassination is less repugnant to the eastern than to the western mind. That three, at least, of the Ezelis were put to death by the Bahá'ís is, in Professor Browne's opinion, hardly a matter of doubt. He further states that 'Abbás Efendí would appear to have interceded for the murderers.\(^1\) The assassination of opponents on the part of a religious leader has for its justification amongst persons brought up in the Muslim system, the actions of Múhammad himself, and it would not, therefore, necessarily appear objectionable to the Bahá'ís. Only it is a bad introduction to a new system which claims above all things to be 'a religion of brotherhood.'

The Turkish authorities seeing those breaches of the peace amongst the Bábís at Adrianople determined to separate the disputants. Bahá'u'lláh and his followers were sent to 'Akká in Syria, and Șubh-i-Ezel and his

\(^1\) New History of the Báb, p. xxi.
\(^2\) This could not yet be the case, for as Count Gobineau says: The Bábí literature is extensive but secret, for he who was known, to possess such books put his life in danger.' p. 310.

\(^1\) Cf. The Episode of the Báb, pp. 93-4; 359-72.
people to Famagusta in Cyprus. This took place in 1868. A few Ezelis were sent with Bahá'u'lláh and a few Bahá'ís with Šúh-i-Ezel. It was hoped that by this arrangement the minority, in each case, would act as spies, and prevent any communication between Bábis in Persia and either of the rival leaders.

After a time Bahá'u'lláh was allowed to live in a house outside the town of 'Akka. When the deposition of Sultán 'Abdu'l-Ḥamíd took place still more liberty was allowed, and 'Abbáš Efendí can now travel abroad. His permanent residence is at Haifa near 'Akka, whither pilgrims from Persia, England and America resort, and by their gifts maintain him and his family in affluence. It is said that there are no converts in the neighbourhood. 'Šúh-i-Ezel in his island home may be compared to Napoleon in St. Helena—a man who has played a great rôle in stirring events and times, but whose active life and power to mould men's thoughts have passed away.*

After this separation had been made, the followers of Bahá'u'lláh increased rapidly, whilst those of Šúh-i-Ezel have decreased. They are now nearly extinct, and are not at all likely ever to come into power again.

Bahá'u'lláh's claim to be the messenger of a new dispensation was an unlooked for development of the work of the Báb, and caused at the time much consternation in the Bábi world. A hopeless schism was made. It was much more than a mere struggle for leadership, for Bahá'u'lláh virtually deposed the Báb from his position as the 'Point of Revelation' and made him merely the forerunner or herald (mubashshir) of 'Him whom God shall manifest.' This involved a serious departure from the earlier conceptions of the Bábis. It placed the Báb in the lower position of one sent to announce the advent of Bahá'u'lláh, whose followers no longer call themselves Bábis, but Bahá'ís.

The teaching of Bahá'u'lláh was more practical than that of the Báb. It was less mystical and he made his appeal not merely to the Shi'ahs of Persia but to all men. The laws framed by Bahá'u'lláh are found in the Kitáb-i-Aqdas. They are much simpler than those laid down by the Báb. He is more concerned with ethics than with metaphysics. Whatever view may be taken of Bahá'u'lláh's usurpation of the leadership, it must be admitted that his more practical mind gave to the movement that life and vigour which, had the system remained as the Báb left it, would not have come into existence.

The organization is good, and by means of letters, pilgrims and messengers communication from all parts is kept up with 'Akka. The Bahá'í missionary has all the tact of the Dá'i of the ancient Shi'ah sect of the Ismá'ílians, who accommodated the instruction given to the opinions of his hearers and only gradually led on to the esoteric doctrines of the system.† In Persia itself there have since been occasional outbursts of persecution, accompanied with the cruelties so common to all Persian repressive action. The political influence of the Bahá'ís in Persia is not great. Under orders issued from head-quarters, they took no part in the first parliament. In the constitutional movement in Persia (1907) the Bábís, though their sympathies are undoubtedly with the reformers, wisely reframed from outwardly identifying themselves with that party, to whom their support, by alienating the orthodox Mujtahids and Mullás, would have proved fatal. This course of conduct may have led to some misconception, for they are said to be looked upon as men who consider the claims of their sect before that of their country.

† See The Druses (C.L.S.), pp. 10-13.

Bahá'u'lláh died on May 16, 1892. As he had disputed the right of leadership with his half-brother, so now his sons commenced to quarrel over it. 'Abbas Efendí, who was called 'the servant of Bahá' (Abdul-Bahá), 'The Most Mighty Branch' (Ghúsh-n-A'zam), and 'He whom God hath desired' (man uráda'lláhu), claimed the right to succeed his father. This claim was disputed by his brother Mírzá Muḥammad 'Ali, called 'The Most Great Branch' (Ghúsh-n-Akbar), who received the support of his two younger brothers. 'Abbas Efendí has on his side a document left by his father which seems to indicate Bahá'u'lláh's intention that he should succeed him. This probably would have been conclusive, but 'Abbas appears to have claimed that the revelation was not ended, but would go on through him. This strengthened the cause of his opponents, for they held that the revelation was closed, and quoted from Bahá'u'lláh's book, the Kitáb-i-Aqdas (the most holy book) the words, 'Whosoever lays claim to any authority before the completion of a millennium is assuredly a liar and a calumniator.' Thus the position is curious. On the one hand, 'Abbas Efendí seems to have his right to the leadership confirmed by his father's written wish; on the other, his claim to be still a channel of revelation is directly contrary to his father's teaching. As in the case of the previous schism between Bahá'u'lláh and Subḥ-i-Ezél, so here also the conflict was between those who held that every day of Theophany must be succeeded by a night of Occultation and those who felt that the Light by which they had walked could not be extinguished, but must rather increase in brightness. The party of 'Abbas Efendí is, however, in the ascendant and is likely to remain so.

About the time when Bahá'u'lláh died, a curious extension of the movement took place in America. A Syrian, Ibráhím George Khayrulláh, who became a convert to Bahá'ísm in Cairo, proceeded to America, became an American citizen and in 1892 made known by his lectures in Chicago the claims of Bahá'u'lláh. In 1893 the 'Parliament of Religions' was held at Chicago, which afforded a further opportunity for the propagation of Bahá'ísm, and for the bringing it prominently to the notice of the American people. An American lady has lately presented to 'Abbas Efendí a large house at the foot of Mount Carmel, and another has written a play celebrating Qurratu'l-'Ayn, the devoted female follower of the Báb. American authors have written books on the subject, to which also reference is frequently made in periodical literature, and so the movement is kept before the notice of the public. After the dispute between the two brothers took place Khayru'lláh espoused the cause of Mírzá Muḥammad 'Alí, but 'Abbás Efendí in the beginning of 1902 sent over to America missionaries to state his own claims and to rebut those of his brother. Now, a nephew, the son of Mírzá Muḥammad 'Alí, who lives in California, declares that the claim of 'Abbás Efendí to be a present channel of revelation is totally opposed to Bahá'u'lláh's teaching, which was that no new manifestation would take place for a thousand years. There are said to be in Chicago, Washington and New York communities of several thousand American Bahá'ís, who maintain some communication with 'Abbás Efendí at 'Akka.

1 Encyclopædia Britannica (eleventh ed.), vol. iii, p. 95.

Bahá'u'lláh in the Lauh-i-Aqdas (most holy book) laid down many practical rules which differ considerably from those which are current in Islám. Prayer is to be said three times a day, instead of the Muslim five times, and the number of prostrations are fewer than those of the Islám ritual. Worshippers no longer turn to Mecca, but towards the 'Most Holy Place, whence issueth the commands to whomsoever is in the earths and the heavens.' That 'Akka is here meant is clear, because it is said that when Bahá'u'lláh dies, or, as it is put in hyperbolic language, 'when the Sun of truth and exhortation sets', the Qibla is to be changed to 'that place which we have appointed you.' Polygamy is sanctioned, for Bahá'u'lláh had two wives. Divorce is permitted on the demand of either party after a preliminary separation of one year. The laws in both cases seem more rigorous than those on the same subjects in Islám; but polygamy and easy divorce are sanctioned.1 'Their efforts to improve the social position of women have been much exaggerated.' Some of the practical duties enjoined are obedience and submission to the ruler and laws of the country in which Bahá'ís dwell, friendly intercourse with all sects and people, such studies as tend to the welfare of mankind, and the practice of some trade or profession. They are exhorted to abstain from sin, to avoid selfishness, and to seek for the reformation of the world. All this is very good, but it does not follow that Baháism is a broad latitudinarian system. 'Every utterance made by the "Manifestation" of the period (whether the Báb, Šubh-i-Ezel, Bahá'u'lláh, 'Abbás Efendí and Muḥammad 'Alí respectively), must be accepted without reserve.'

An American follower of 'Abbás Efendí, in a book called 'Abbás Efendí, writes enthusiastically of the marvellous spirit of liberality shown in Baháism. He says that 'it recognizes every other religion as equally

1 Phelps, 'Abbás Efendí, p. 159. Count Gobineau says that the Báb did not substitute any Qibla for the ancient ones of Jerusalem and Mecca, which he set aside; but declared that "ce sera le grand Revelateur qui décidera," p. 332.

2 Brown, Encyclopaedia Britannica (eleventh ed.), vol. iii, p. 95.
BAHAISM

divine in origin with its own; but Bahá'u'lláh writing of his own religion in his most important work, the Kitáb-i-Aqdas, says: 'The first thing which God has prescribed unto His servants is knowledge of the Day-spring of His revelation, and the Dawning-place of His command, which is the station of His Spirit in the world of creation and command. Whosoever attaineth unto this hath attained unto all good, and whosoever is debarred therefrom is of the people of error, even though he produce all manner of good works.' In other words no amount of good deeds will help a man who does not attain to a knowledge of Bahá'u'lláh.
That is the road to the attainment 'of all good', which is scarcely a recognition of 'every other religion as equally divine.' The Babís were intolerant and would have kept unbelievers in a position of inferiority. The Bahá'ís profess to look forward to a period of universal brotherhood, which shall include men of all religions, but this theory may be put forth more as a matter of policy than of principle. Those who know them well doubt the permanence of this idea of universal tolerance. 3 Professor Browne who wrote the preface to Mr. Phelps' book, referring to that author's confidence in the tolerant spirit of Bahá'ism, says: 'I cannot wholly share his confidence as to how the Bahá'ís would treat either the Shi'ite Muhammadans, the Súfís, or the Ezelis (against all of whom they have, for different reasons, a special grudge) if they should one day, as is within the range of possibility, become paramount in Persia.' 1 Again, 'it is not certain to the present writer (Professor Browne) that their triumph over Islam in Persia would ultimately conduce to the welfare of that distracted land, or that the tolerance which they now advocate would stand the test of success and supremacy.' 4

Mr. Phelps, an ardent admirer of 'Abbás Efendi, gives an account of the religion and philosophy of Bahá'ism, as it was taught to him at 'Akka from which we gather the following information. 'The Bahá'í conception of the Supreme Being is not a personality, but an essence, an all-pervading force or power, frequently referred to as love, or truth, or life.' 'God', says 'Abbás Efendi, 'is pure essence.' 3 'A messenger comes whenever, through the lapse of time and the forgetfulness of men, the voice of his predecessor becomes obscured; and the extent to which the truth is declared by each depends upon the capacity of the age to receive
it. Such messengers were Moses, Zoroaster, Buddha, Christ, Mahomet, and the founders of the Bahá'í faith.
The revelation of the last is fuller than any which has preceded it, men being now better fitted to understand the truth.' 4

'The real human soul' is described by 'Abbás Efendi as a ray of God's love, sent by Him to every human being at its conception; 5 with this soul the human consciousness must effect union during the term of its

1 Phelps, p. xx.
3 Phelps, p. 114.
4 Ibid., p. 126.
5 Ibid., p. 124.
BAHA'ISM

This result then follows: 'When the union is complete, there results an individuality possessed of divine wisdom and the all-pervading powers of spirit, knowing itself and also knowing that it is part of the Infinite, Absolute, Eternal Essence. . . . In its ultimate perfection, it passes beyond time, space, place, and form. It is then man and God in one, the reflection and the one.' Thus a Baha'i must believe in an impersonal God and the loss of his own personality in the future. He must further acknowledge that 'the spirit has passed away from the bodies of the old religions', that 'these bodies are dead or dying; but the same spirit is reborn in a new body—that is, the Body of the Law contained in the utterances of Baha'u'llah.' A world-teacher greater than his predecessors has now appeared. 'He is a world-teacher in a broader sense than they. His teaching cannot be limited to any nation or race.' It is distinctly stated that in all the previous manifestations God sent His Holy Spirit, or breath to breathe upon the peoples of the world, so 'when the spirit was manifested in the prophets of old, they represented as much of the divine nature as it was possible for the people of those periods to assimilate.' Then follows the astounding statement: 'Now the world has advanced. It was necessary for the essence itself of God to become manifest and this it did through the person of Baha'u'llah.' One of 'Abbas Efendi's statement is: 'Look always to God for aid, not to frail human nature.' Then follows: 'Call on Baha for strength to guide you. That spirit is now the renovating influence upon this earth.'

In the most recent English book on the subject many creeds are described, but the account of Bahaism is short and superficial. A writer who says that 'the difference between the Shi'ah and the Sunni is mainly one of ritual' presumably knows nothing of the great Shi'ah dogma of the Imamah, and so fails to see that Babism and its off-shoot Bahaism are in reality but other forms of Mahdihood (ante p. 9). Unless the historical basis of Bahaism is correctly understood, no right conclusion concerning it can be arrived at. Nothing is said about the supersession of Subh-i-Ezel by Baha'u'llah, unless the historical basis of Bahaism is correctly understood, no right conclusion concerning it can be arrived at. Nothing is said about the supersession of Subh-i-Ezel by Baha'u'llah.

1 Phelps, p. 127. 2 Ibid., pp. 128-9. This does not appear to be the view held by many Persian Baha'is, which is that the spirits of men preserve their identity after death, and they say that 'Abbas Efendi so teaches. Probably like other mystical sects, off-shoots of the Shi'ah system, Bahaism has an esoteric doctrine for the initiated, and that others bear very much what they desire to learn. Cf. Article on Bahaism in The Moslem Review, vol. ii, No. 3, p. 240.

3 Phelps, pp. 144-5. 4 Ibid., p. 149.
or of the opposition to the leadership of 'Abbás Efendí made by his brother Mirzá Muhammad 'Alí. The author calls Baháísm the 'religion of brotherhood', a curious title for a religion which so far has produced nothing but dissension between brothers. In its highest domestic circles it has absolutely failed to bring peace and harmony into the family life of its leaders. We are told that 'no organized religion appeases the soul's craving for light'; that 'a teacher is eagerly looked for who shall focus the mass of unco-ordinated effort and voice the aspirations of an unquiet age. The Gospel of 'Abdu'l-Bahá is, therefore, making extraordinary progress.' His followers are called 'a brotherhood of idealists whose self-devotion breathes new life into dying creeds.' But the existing organized religions are very much alive and are by no means dying. The Muslim propaganda, for example, was never more vigorous than it is now. Is it a fact that the great religions of the world can give no light to the souls of their followers? Certainly Christianity, now spreading so rapidly in all lands gives light and peace. Yet, according to the western admirers of Baháísm, belief in the absolute failure of any existing religion to give any light, and the belief that other creeds are 'dying', seem to be a necessary article of faith for those who accept the teaching of 'Abbás Efendí.

An excellent account of the teaching given will be found in the Record of Christian Work (August, 1912). It summarizes the teaching of Bahá'u'lláh and of 'Abbás Efendí thus: '(1) The gathering of all the inhabitants of this terrestrial globe to the acceptance of him as the manifestation of God, i.e. the divine guide to the unification of all religions in one, and that one—Baháísm; (2) universal love as a consequence of the common religion; (3) universal peace and abolition of all possible causes of disagreement, with consequent prohibition of war and shedding of blood, and the mutual love which springs from confidence; (4) the harmonizing of all national customs and characteristics; (5) the unification of all the languages of the world, the only two to be left being Arabic and Persian.'

'Abbás Efendí is a man of considerable power, who, by his apparent breadth of view, captivates a certain class of hearers. As a great unifier of all religions he claims that Bahá'u'lláh was al-Mahdi of the Muslims; the Christ of the Christians come again at this His second advent; the Messiah of the Jews. Buddha, Zoroaster, Christ, Muhammad and Bahá'u'lláh were all messengers and manifestations of God. Bahá'u'lláh was the last and greatest of all. 'Abbás Efendí, however, is the newest manifestation. An American writer in The Continent (May 13, 1912) after an interview with 'Abbás Efendí at Haifa says: 'My impression was that 'Abbás Efendí had little knowledge of the progress of the spirit of truth and altruism and brotherhood throughout the world.... He is an improvement upon the Muslims from whom he sprung. As for accepting Baháísm in lieu of Christianity, or as a thing superimposed upon Christianity that seems to me absurd and unthinkable. I expect to see the fad pass away in this country. It has shot its bolt.'

The recent visit of 'Abbás Efendí to Paris and London has called forth some periodical literature,¹ not of any historical value, but interesting as showing how many people there are who are ever seeking after something new. 'Abbás Efendí is described as receiving in his residence in London 'Christians of every denomination, Buddhists of every nationality, Theosophists, Muḥammadans, Agnostics and Gnostics', and as answering all the varied questions put to him in a simple and direct manner. Apparently this was done to the satisfaction of his hearers, for we are told that 'to a Christian, Bahá’ísm is Christianity; to a Buddhist, Buddhist; to a mystical Sūfí it speaks in the mystical language of the Sūfí; to a rationalist it is logical.'

It is said that Bahá’ísm claims to have the adhesion of at least one-third of the Persian people,² that it has numerous followers in Egypt, India, Burmah, chiefly from among the Muḥammadans. I can only speak for India, where it certainly has not gained any hold of the Muḥammadan population. In South India I know of the existence of only one Bahá’í.

It is curious to see what little notice, often none at all, European admirers of Bahá’ísm take of the two great family quarrels. Is it because the practice in the highest circles of Bahá’ísm has been so strangely in contrast with the statements put forth for the approval of Europeans and Americans? 'Abbás Efendí is said to describe the teaching of Bahá’u’lláh thus:

¹The Contemporary Review, March, 1912; The Fortnightly Review, April, 1912.
²A resident in Persia says they number about 100,000. See article on Bahá’ísm in the Moslem Review, vol. i, No. 3.

CONCLUSION

'If a religion becomes the cause of hatred and disharmony it would be better not to exist than to exist.'¹ He evidently presumed on the ignorance of these whom he addressed as to the past hatred between his father and his uncle and of his own family quarrels.

Both Bahá’u’lláh and 'Abbás Efendí, like all other religious leaders in the history of the past, often gave utterance to expressions of real devotion and also to aphorisms containing much that is good. These Mr. Phelps quotes largely and speaking of those who think about religion, the conclusion finally arrived at is that 'to know the Master of 'Akká ('Abbás Efendí) is at once a confirmation and a revelation to those who have thus searched and thought. Their reason and intuition is justified, the possibilities of human nature are revealed to them.'³

We have seen that it was a leading principle of the Bábís and the Bahá’ís that the new manifestation came when the world was weary and the times, in a religious sense, were out of joint. This ardent American advocate for 'Abbás Efendí holds⁴ that now faith has waned, that true religion is forgotten, that in both 'the east and the west men are wandering in the dark;' so that it belongs to the divine order that a messenger should now come. This is a weak basis on which to build up Bahá’u’lláh’s claim to be such a divinely-sent messenger, or for the position assigned to 'Abbás Efendí, for it is far more correct to say that ¹Contemporary Review, March, 1912, p. 397.

²Phelps, p. 255. ³Ibid., p. 256.
⁴Ibid., p. 255.
the Christian religion, at least, was never more alive than now, that its missionary activities were never more vigorous nor more successful, that faith in its ultimate success was never more confident, and that true religion, exemplified in countless forms of service to man, was never more intense. This being the real state of affairs, the case for the pretensions of Bahá'ísm on its own principle fails, and with it that of 'Abbás Efendí also, for it is clear that it is not a period when a new manifestation, in the form of a leader of a sectarian departure from one of the great branches of the Muslim religion, is needed for the edification and enlightenment of mankind.

The Islam Series

The Four Rightly-Guided Khalifas. By the Rev. Canon Sell, D.D.
The Battles of Badr and Uhud. By the Rev. Canon Sell, D.D.
Al-Qur'an. By the Rev. Canon Sell, D.D.
The Cult of 'Ali. By the Rev. Canon Sell, D.D.
The Holy Spirit in Qur'an and Bible. By the Rev. C. G. Mylrea, B.A.
Sufism. By the Rev. Canon Sell, D.D.
The Verse of Stoning. By the Rev. W. H. T. Gairdner, B.A.
Christianity and Muhammadanism. By the Rev. W. R. W. Gardner, M.A.
The Hanifs. By the Rev. Canon Sell, D.D.
The Recensions of the Qur'an. By the Rev. Canon Sell, D.D.
Selections from the Qur'an. Edited by the Rev. Canon Sell, D.D.
THE ISLÁM SERIES

Bahaism. By the Rev. Canon Sell, D.D.

In the Press.

Life of Muhammad. By the Rev. Canon Sell, D.D.
Outlines of Islam. By the Rev. Canon Sell, D.D.