The London Thomas Breakwell School Appointment of Director 2002

The Local Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of Wandsworth invites applications from dedicated and energetic individuals to undertake this exciting and challenging task. The London Thomas Breakwell School, situated in Putney, is an expanding and evolving organisation. With eight classes, ranging from 0-18 years, structured moral, spiritual and factual education is offered to children and youth of all creeds and backgrounds from the London area. The Directorship is a post which calls for physical stamina, imagination, consultative experience and skills in relationships. You will be supported by wonderful children, loving and united parents and gifted teachers. Preparatory training is available. Together we will help to build the future. If you are interested in this vital calling and have faith that Bahá'u'lláh will support you and shower you with the bounties which only sacrifice can bestow, please apply for further details to:

Conference on The Science of Morality

February 8-9, 2002

Venue: Institute of Child Health, London

The theme of the conference is the exploration of a body of evidence which indicates repeatable, affirmable data which may be used for prediction, assessment and treatment of sociopathy. It may lead through better understanding to prevention.

Hard science has not been an important aspect of our traditional attitude to antisocial behaviour but the advent of functional brain scanning, advances in neuropharmacology and psychogenetics have been allied to progressive thinking in sociobiology, primatology and psychology to lead to this new ontology.

This conference brings together world experts in these fields and those of theology and philosophy to ensure an informative, enjoyable and provocative programme.
