

Family Plowing and other Prairie Poems

Duane L. Herrmann

Meadowlark Books, 2019

Family Plowing and other Prairie Poems new and used, a collection of ninety-five prairie poems gathered from previous collections, and some new. The collection celebrates the prairie and life on and under it. Many of the poems were written out on the prairie with sky above, wind and grass, some trees and views of miles and miles and miles in all directions. The author's family has lived and farmed on the Kansas prairie since the 60s - the 1860s. The prairie is his heart and home.

Below is a selection of 9 poems; purchase the entire volume at meadowlark-books.com

Contents:

Family Plowing
Grandfather's Road
Spring Lake
Chicken Creek Road
Spring Towers
Night Necklaces
Pigs in a Blanket
House on the Edge of a Meadow
The Wind's Own
The Family House
Magic Evening
Lost Road
Tiny Pond
Plowing Lesson
Coyote Rules the World
Kansas Nachtlied, Goethe
Summer Wetting
Prairie Hawk
Witness
Making Hay
Grandfather's Barn
For Deer Waiting
Song of the Prairie Night

Wagon Tale
On the Horizon
Builders of Barns Unnatural Mark
Sleeping to the Sound of Rain Barn Remains
Next Five Exits
Buffalo Surprise
Absence by Inference Garden Effort
On the Hillside Road Through the Trees
Stone Shell
The Fullness of Summer
Tree Dance
Rolling Seas
Dawn Light
Traveling Caught in the Air
Flint Hills Farm
Spirit of the Well
Haunting Summons
Cottonwood
Moving Water
Buffalo Spirit
Country Buried
Night Secrets
Rural Conversation
Transition
Pasture Gate
Schoolhouse Picnic Sky Vast
Pond Experiment
Wind Blown
Ancient Water
Rain Dance
Testing the Tree

Fence Building
Challenge of the Bridge
The Sky
Time Has Told
Prairie Breath
Golden
Evening Meditation
Silo Sentinel
Autumn Messengers
Traces that Remain
Night Coming
Decision to Honor
October Forever!
No Mountain Lions
Autumn Wind Speaks
Lonely Land
Seeds
Autumn Afternoon
Remaining Witness
Clearing Cedars
Winter Wet
My Father's Eyes
Bluebird Winter
Snow Falling
Snow Makes Clear
Winter Rodent Dreams
Fire in the Snow
Snow Reveals
In the Snow
Fire in Snowlight
Warning
The Flower Dreams
Too Cold
Waiting for Spring
Haunting Hope of Spring

GRANDFATHER'S ROAD

Invisible to the traveler now, two tracks through the grass, but the discerning eye can see two fence rows on each side.

Across the prairie and down the hill it leads over a little cement bridge,
with iron rails;

One missing.
Also missing is the house and barn and windmill.
Not even a line of stones.

His early life,
his boyhood home,
has returned to the prairie from whence it came.

The earth
reclaimed its own.

But the road remains to show the way to the past of my grandfather's life:
he walked this way to school.

CHICKEN CREEK ROAD

No up-scale suburb, this!
“Chicken Creek Road”
named because of – what?

Obviously:
chickens in the creek.
At least at some memorable moment.

The possibilities
are wild:
chickens everywhere!
up and down the creek!

This is:
local color,
a homespun name,
not to be easily forgotten.

Who could ever forget an address on –
Chicken Creek Road?

NIGHT NECKLACES

Glittering strings
strewn across hillsides.
Large and small flaming jewels
form lines and loops
here and there,
up, down, around.
At night the sight
is awesome to behold.
Darkness hides
grass from ash
and contrasts smoke towering high lit by flames
illuminating,
reflecting,
necklaces
adorning hillsides
in prairie spring.

THE WIND'S OWN

Wind:

roaring, howling –
wild, screaming
shrieking into every crack – shrilly, demonically.

Wind:

incessantly calling –
pleading, pulling, prying; never letting up –
continually, mercilessly.

Alone –

on the hill, the woman stood;
surrounded by the wind crying through the grasses – pushing the clouds along.

She tried to see a house,
or person,

but no,
she was alone,
no other human evidence.

Alone –

no one for miles – Just grass and hills and wind.
her mate away to pay the claim she joined the wind.

shrieking, howling, crying...

she was sister to the wind.

They ran the hills together:
companions.

The wind had claimed its own.

Up and down, she ran and rolled,
stumbled,

unaware – and ran again.

Crying, shrieking...

she was found
running with the wind.

No human here,
she fought loving arms around her:

a creature of the wind.

she has her peace now,
The wind does not trouble her on the Hill of Silence – caressed by the breeze.

PLOWING LESSON

I was fourteen just learning to farm –
my first plowing lesson, driving a tractor
only the summer before.
Father examined my effort:
“Plow to the edge of the field then raise the plow to turn.”
So I did and swiped the only tree –
front axel bent:
tires angled to a V.
Thoughtful, my father looked and swiped again the tree – re-bending the axel straight!
Then he left me
to finish plowing the field!

WITNESS

The abandon building
gray
weathered wood and warped still erect, upright and proud here
on the side of the ridge, now
prairie all around - lonely, once
the seat of culture-learning pride
to become "Americans" this was their school and center when they knew who they were becoming.

MAKING HAY

Mornings when the dew had dried Granpa mowed the field of hay going round and round and round,
outside to center.

Early after lunch the boy would rake the now dry hay
once around for Granpa's twice,
outside to center.

Fluffed up windrows snaked along from sheets of new cut grass raking opposite the cutting,
outside to center.

Once done, the hay was raked again merging two windrows to one, drying all sides of the grass,
outside to center.

Father ran the baler, especially - if the knotter had a temper, following the windrow
outside to center

SONG OF THE PRAIRIE NIGHT

Howling, calling,
yipping joy:
coyotes all around in communion.

Others too
join their songs:
owls in speech,
sleepy birds,
while more rustle grass as they pass.

Wind stirs trees –
bending branches
whispering secrets of the leaves.

Insect chorus
whirrs and chirps
while deer
sleep soundly
hidden safe
in grass and brush.

Clouds slip silent
in and out while the moon smiles over all and stars
move silent by.

BUFFALO SURPRISE

On a lonely country road,
gravel,
winding through hills,
along the creeks;
two friends,
a drive of relaxation:

Where does this road go?
What will we see?

Around a curve
suddenly in the trees -
a herd of buffalo standing but too still to be true:
silhouettes with details
accurately painted, quickly passed –

wishing they were real.